

COURSE DESCRIPTIONS
SOCIOLOGY
FALL 2009

Undergraduate Courses

SOC 1010 - Introductory Sociology (3)

The fundamental concepts and principles of sociology with special attention to sociological theory and research methods. Survey of the diverse substantive fields in the discipline with a primary emphasis on the institutions in contemporary American society.

SOC 2052 – Sociology of the Family (3)

Comparison of family organizations in relation to other social institutions in various societies; an introduction to the theory of kinship and marriage systems.

SOC 2230 – Criminology (3)

Socio-cultural conditions affecting the definition, recording, and treatment of delinquency and crime. Examination of theories of deviant behavior, the role of the police, judicial and corrective systems and the victim in criminal behavior.

SOC 2470 – American Society & Popular Culture (3)

This course is an early level course, which aims to introduce students to a sociological perspective on popular culture, and to examine the working of selected sociological concepts in several examples of popular culture. A familiarity with introductory level sociology is suggested, but not required. The course has two parts. In the first we will become acquainted with sociological perspectives and theories on culture; in the second we will look at several popular novels and movies and discuss how they might be interpreted sociologically.

SOC 2559 sec. 100 – Economy & Society (3)

Markets, firms, banks, money are all part of everyday experience, but how are they organized and operated? What do they mean? How do they vary internationally and across time? The central idea of economic sociology is that capitalist institutions are "embedded" in social relations. We will go beyond this perspective by examining the extent to which social processes constitute the economy, rather than merely providing a context to it.

SOC 2559 sec. 200 – Systems of Inequality (3)

This course will examine various types of inequality (race, class, gender) in the US and abroad. We will discuss sociological theories covering various dimensions of inequality, considering key research findings and their implications. We will examine to what extent ascriptive characteristics impact a person's life chances, how social structures are produced and reproduced, and how individuals are able or unable to negotiate these structures.

SOC 3020 - Introduction to Social Theory (3)

An introduction to the major theoretical issues and traditions in sociology, especially as developed in the writings of Marx, Weber, and Durkheim, Sociology majors are expected to take this course in their third year.

SOC 3120 - Sociology Research Workshop (4)

An introduction to data analysis and data processing, as well as the conceptualization of sociological problems. Emphasis on individual student projects.

SOC 3130 - Introduction to Social Statistics (4)

Prerequisite: SOC 3120

Elementary statistical methods for social science applications. Topics include summarizing data with graphs and descriptive measures, generalizing from a sample to a population as in opinion polls, and determining the relationship between two variables. No special mathematical background is required, and students will be taught basic computer techniques. Three hours of lecture, two hours of laboratory work. Majors are expected to take this course in their third year.

SOC 3400 – Gender & Sexuality (3)

Focuses on the construction of gender and of sexuality, and of the many ways human groups regulate and attach meanings to these categories. Some general themes addressed will be: contemporary and historical definitions of gender, sex, and sexuality; gender socialization; the varieties of sexual identities and relationships; embodiment, childbearing, and families in the contemporary United States.

SOC 3410 – Race & Ethnic Relations (3)

Introduces the study of race and ethnic relations, including the social and economic conditions promoting prejudice, racism, discrimination, and segregation. Examines contemporary American conditions, and historical and international materials.

SOC 3470 – Sociology of Development (3)

The course is divided into four parts that span out evolutionary historical past, the rise of the modern world, the present “global economy’ global ecology” and our prospects for the future.

SOC 3559 sec. 100 – Sociology of Emotions (3)

This course explores the role of emotions in social interaction as well as how societies and cultures shape emotional expression. The objective is to decode the subtle rules of emotional display implicit in many social interactions and excavate the cultural histories of particular emotions such as love, sympathy, shame, anxiety, and sadness. Readings include theoretical and empirical work from both sociologists and social psychologists.

SOC 3559 sec. 200 – Sociology of Violence (3)

This course explores social processes involved in violence. The course addresses topics such as the social causes and consequences of violence, the subjective experience of violence, and the representation of violence in popular culture. Among others, forms of violence covered include rape, genocide, war, terrorism, domestic homicide, and gang violence.

SOC 3559 sec. 300 – Gender & Media (3)

Cross-listed with GETR 3590

The question of gender in film is often noted; it is discussed less with regard to other, older media. Yet, with the development of every new media – the alphabet, the printing press, opera, photography, film,, etc. - the symbolic gender order is redefined. Drawing on examples from antiquity to modern times and touching on such specific media as the mechanical clock and paper money, this course explores the gender aspect of media.

SOC 3595 – Special Topics in Sociology: Women, Islam & Modernity (3)

The global Islamic revival is often considered an obstacle to gender equality. So how are we to understand women's involvement in Islamic movements? And what can these phenomena tell us about gender and modernity? This class will read ethnographic accounts of Muslim women in various parts of the world. We will discuss these ethnographies with an eye for how they speak to and challenge sociological theories of gender, identity, and globalization.

SOC 4054 – Political Sociology (3)

Prerequisites: Six credits of sociology or permission of instructor

This course studies the relationship between social structure and political institutions. Competing theories about such topics as power structures, political participation, ideology, party affiliation, voting behavior, and social movements are discussed in the context of recent research on national and local politics in the U.S.

SOC 4055 – Sociology of Law (3)

Prerequisites: Six credits of sociology or permission of instructor

After a brief history of legal sociology during the past century, this course pursues a highly theoretical approach to the prediction and explanation of legal behavior. The primary focus is the legal case – a specific conflict between the parties. What is the social structure of the conflict, such as the nature of the relationship between the adversaries, the social status of each, and the cultural distance that separates them? What is the social location of the third parties, such as the judge or jury members? How do these variables predict and explain the way a case is handled, such as whether it goes to court and, if so, who wins and what happens to the loser? Although the scope of course is cross-cultural and historical, law in modern America receives disproportionate attention.

SOC 4140 – People & Things: Sociology of Consumptions (3)

Prerequisites: Six credits of sociology or permission of instructor

What do we mean by consumption, consumerism, and the consumer society? Why have these become central terms in current debates about modernity? This course considers the nature and effects of consumer society; it explores the theories, practices, and politics of modern consumption. First we will examine the rise and historical development of the consumer society, primarily in the West but also in other parts of the world. We will also discuss social divisions associated with consumption and investigate how class, gender, ethnicity, and race shape the nature of one's participation in consumer culture. Other topics include the cultural and social meanings of seemingly impersonal objects such as credit cards and money; the effects of globalization on the practices of consumption; and the role of consumption in creating personal, political, and place identities. Drawing on daily practices such as shopping, food and drink, clothing and fashion, the course will examine the multiple and contradictory roles that consumption plays in contemporary society.

This course considers the nature and effects of consumer society; it explores the theories, practices, and politics of modern consumption. Topics include the historical development of consumer society; the role of consumption in creating personal and political identities; the cultural and social meanings of seemingly impersonal objects like money; the commodification of social life; the effects of globalization on the practices of consumption.

SOC 4170 Theoretical Sociology (3)

Prerequisites: Six credits of sociology or permission of instructor

This course surveys eight major strategies by which sociologists explain human behavior. Readings illustrate each strategy with particular theories, such as theories of deviant behavior, creativity, and terrorism. The course also addresses several issues in the philosophy of science and endorses a completely scientific style of sociology.

SOC 4350 – Comparative Gender Stratification (3)

Prerequisites: Six credits of sociology or permission of instructor

The course examines (1) theories of gender stratification, (2) the extent of, and changes in, gender stratification in the U.S. and (3) a cross-cultural look at the extent of gender stratification from our hunting-and-gathering ancestors to today's information/biotech society. The course will also (4) look at contemporary examples of both local level gender equality/near equality and extreme gender inequality (e.g., in Taliban Afghanistan).

SOC 4420 – Sociology of Inequality (3)

Prerequisites: Six credits of sociology or permission of instructor

A survey of basic theories and methods used to analyze structures of social inequality. Includes comparative analysis of the inequalities of power and privilege, both their causes and their consequences for social conflict and social change.

SOC 4800/4810/4820 – Undergraduate Internship Program (4)

Prerequisites: Students must be a fourth year sociology major with substantial completion of major requirements

An internship placement to be arranged by the supervising faculty. Students will work in various agencies in the Charlottesville community such as health care delivery, social services, juvenile justice, etc. Regular class meetings with the supervising faculty to analyze the intern experience and to discuss assigned reading. Only three credits can be counted toward the Sociology any-level major requirement.

SOC 4850 – Media Culture & Society (3)

Prerequisites: Six credits of sociology or permission of instructor

This seminar aims to foster a critical media literacy, whereby students learn to read and criticize the texts of their cultural environment. It will analyze some alternative approaches to the study of culture, and it will display the merits of a multi-perspective method. Particular emphasis will be placed upon the issues of success, power, gender, class, race, and ethnicity. The seminar will use both print and film texts.

SOC 4970 – Special Studies in Sociology (1-6)

Prerequisites: Fourth year students with a minimum GPA of 3.2 in sociology (or overall GPA of 3.2 for non-majors) and permission of instructor

An independent study project conducted by the student under the supervision of an instructor of his or her choice.

SOC 4980 – Distinguished Majors (3)

Prerequisites: Sociology major with strong academic record, overall GPA of 3.4 at the start of their fourth year and have completed SOC 1010, 3120, 3130, and two other sociology courses

Students in the program complete a two-semester written thesis or special project in their fourth year under the supervision of a faculty member. This program allows students to pursue their own interests in depth and have the intellectual satisfaction of personally defining and completing a sustained project. The Department encourages diverse substantive concerns and methodological approaches.

Graduate Courses

Courses at the 5000-level are open to advanced undergraduates. All such courses have a prerequisite of six credits of sociology or permission of the instructor; some have additional prerequisites as noted.

SOC 5030 – Classical Sociological Theory (3) (History of Sociology)

Prerequisites: Six credits of sociology or permission of instructor; open to advanced undergraduates

Seminar focusing on the writing of Marx, Weber, Durkheim, and other social theories. Open to students in related disciplines.

SOC 5100 – Research Design & Methods (3) (The Logic of Sociological Research)

Prerequisites: SOC 3120, or graduate standing, six credits of sociology or permission of instructor

Study of the steps necessary to design a research project including searching the literature, formulating a problem, deriving propositions, operationalizing concepts, constructing explanations, and testing hypothesis.

SOC 5140 – Qualitative Methods (3)

This course is designed as an introductory overview of qualitative research methods. The course begins with a review of the logic of social enquiry and the basis for claiming sociological knowledge. We then consider a variety of analytic and interpretive approaches to sociological research. The methods covered include interviewing, grounded theory, content analysis, field methods/ethnography, and historical and comparative sociology using documentary/archival materials. We will be reading theoretical, didactic and exemplary materials.

SOC 5559 – City & Modernity (3)

This course considers the city as a privileged site of modernity. It explores urban space as an expression of the cultural, social and political dynamics of modernity. Topics include the rise of the modern metropolis, public space and public culture, and the ways in which social divisions are expressed in urban forms.

SOC 7130 – Introduction to Social Statistics (3)

Studies elementary statistical methods of social science applications. Topics include summarizing data with graphs and descriptive measures, generalizing from a sample to a population as in opinion polls, and determining the relationship between two variables. No special mathematical background is required, and students will be taught basic computer techniques. Graduate student with no prior background in statistics are expected to take this course as a prerequisite for SOC 5120, Intermediate Statistics.

SOC 7559 – Sociological Approaches to Music, Art, Literature (3)

This course considers the theoretical perspectives and empirical strategies sociologists have taken to studying both "high" and "popular" music, art, and literature. The course covers both classical and contemporary scholarship. Some key topics include production and reception, classification and evaluation systems, questions of cultural entrepreneurship, the artist/author, and culture in everyday life.

SOC 8030/8040 – Sociological Issues (3)

Restricted to: Grad Arts & Sciences, Sociology

Contemporary issues affecting sociology as a science, as an academic discipline, and as a profession. Frequent guest lectures.

SOC 8470 – Sociology of Knowledge (3)

Explores social foundations of knowledge – formal systems of knowledge to the realities of everyday life. Relevant classical and contemporary literature on the subject is covered.

SOC 8998 – Non-Topical Research, Preparation for MA Research (3)

For Master's research, taken before a thesis director has been selected.

SOC 8999 – Non-Topical Research (3)

For Master's thesis, taken under the supervision of a thesis director

SOC 9010 – Directed Readings (credit to be arranged)

SOC 9050/9060 – Research Apprenticeship (3-12)

This course provides practical research experience through close collaboration with a faculty member. [Faculty members will propose projects and choose apprentices from the pool of applicants.] Student apprentices will be junior colleagues, involved in all phases of the project. This collaborative effort will lead to a distinct scholarly product, usually a co-authored paper suitable for publication.

SOC 9050/9060 is offered on a Satisfactory/Unsatisfactory basis, typically for 3 hours of credit. (Three hours may be counted as part of the 24 hours of graded courses for the M.A. degree, though students selecting this options may not apply credits for Directed Readings to the 24-hour requirement. Up to 6 hours of credits for SOC 905/906 may be applied to Ph.D. requirements; however, the number of allowable hours for Directed Readings is correspondingly reduced.)

SOC 9998 – Non-Topical Research, Preparation for Doctoral Research (3-12)

For Doctoral Research, taken before a dissertation director has been selected.

SOC 9999 – Non-Topical Research (After Ph.D. Proposal)

For Doctoral Research, taken after a dissertation director has been selected.
